

Jackdaw news

This week has seen us start with a day focusing on our feelings and how being different is good when we welcomed GR8ASUR to school. It was a lovely day and thanks to all the parents who could make it for the assembly.

Tuesday saw a trip to the Theatre Royal to see the mini proms. The children had a wonderful time and who knows; it may inspire them to want to perform on the big stage too.

In maths we have completed our work on place value and are beginning to apply this in our mental maths working, focusing on how it helps with addition and subtraction. Next week will move on to written methods. If you would like guidance on how these are done, please pop in on open tray morning or catch me at the end of the day.

In science we continue our exploration of food types by considering what different animals eat and how there are clues in their appearance that hint to whether they are carnivores, omnivores or herbivores. To help, we went outside and tried to spot some different animals and were lucky to see two jackdaws chasing a marsh harrier away from their nest (a brave thing to do considering how much larger a harrier is). We also spotted some caterpillars and were able to sort these animals into one of the three groups.

What ate these plants?

It tickles!

Hungry, hungry caterpillars!

Next week we will continue with addition and subtraction in maths. We will finish our plan of our T4W text and begin to construct our own version with a focus on how to use paragraphs and conjunctions. P.E will see us complete our tag rugby sessions with a mini tournament.

Parliament News: May I also mention that the School Parliament are now in full swing with preparations for the Halloween day at school on the 4th of November. A variety of fund raising ideas have been planned; from dressing up in a favourite costume for the day, to coming to a big screen showing of Hotel Transylvania after school. The monies raised will all go towards more fun things for the field.

Watch out for further details which the School Parliament will be releasing soon.
